

A civil exchange of ideas should be the goal. Each of us come to the conversation with our own history. Some is a shared history with others who may agree with us and others may have totally different experiences. It is through the prism of our history that we process information and put forth solutions. This is not a single prism, but one that is adjusted by all the factors affecting our daily lives. Civility is the respect for each others thoughts. Agreement is not required but without the open exchange of points of view the core issues we face will never be solved. Allowing any group or individual to separate us from the conversation only serves to empower that individual or group. Providing power for the action only emboldens others to pursue the same path. The ultimate result is each center of power protecting the power and neglecting the problems assigning blame. Assigning blame will not fix a road, build a hospital or teach a child. If the American Experiment is to move forward each of us must focus on the problems and work together for a solution. Even the most emotional issues when dissected into the component parts offer areas that can be resolved. Our goal should be solve the problems we can and civilly disagree on the larger issues.
