When the tide comes in, ocean waves can sweep over them, reducing them to rubble in seconds. If you've played near sand and water very often, you know that water runs right through sand. The simple answer is that not all of the ocean floor is made of sand. Sand forms when rocks break down from weathering and eroding over thousands and even millions of years. Rocks take time to decompose, especially quartz (silica) and feldspar. Often starting thousands of miles from the ocean, rocks slowly travel down rivers and streams, constantly breaking down along the way.

Sand, gravel and phosphate from the sea. The extraction of mineral resources from the sea is by no means a new activity. Many countries have in fact been. Ocean Blue Ocean Sand Beach Resort - Call Toll Free: or Book Online.
